My life fits
into a duffel bag:
jeans, charger,
the blue hoodie
that smells like both houses.

Friday night,
I trade one driveway
for another. One long and broken the other smooth and full of love.

I have memorized
the choreography of goodbye:
hug, promise,
see you Sunday.

Love does not disappear.
It just jumps from home to home.